BALLS of FIRE explained.

Various have been the opinions of the balls of fire seen in different parts through Britain. The elements contained a great quantity of electric fluid, but the clouds not sufficiently condensed to form a regular and strong charge of lightning, these balls drop from a surcharge, of course, without the report of thunder, and the thin dark clouds, opening a small bore, and dispersing on the discharge. These balls having dropped from a greater quantity, rolled along the atmosphere, and were round at first as a drop of water, till the compression of the air, as they approached the earth, either give different shapes to, or divide them when dropped, in that other and grosser medium of air. These fire-balls were strongly ignited, and, had they fallen upon hay, straw, or the like, would have readily communicated fire: they were charges of lightning dropped from uncompressed clouds, and in the same state would all like lightning fall, without force or impetuosity, did not the great body and compression of the clouds hurl it forth with such violence, that nothing can resist it, immediately followed by reports of thunder.

SANCHO, in doleful Dumps,

To his good Friend, Mrs. N——— N.

A Friend in need's a friend indeed:

Oh may my humble prayer succeed!

Poor Sancho is in great distress,

Disgrac'd, in debt, and penniless.

Alas! alas! what must he do?

Unless he finds relief from you.

'Twas yesterday (O day of woe!

May I ne'er such another know!)

A mutton-chop my sense allur'd,

To which a kidney plumb was strew'd:

It tempting lay, and cry'd, "Come, eat me."

"I will," said I, "though they should beat me."

So up I sprung, and seiz'd the prey,

And thought to have a happy day.

But oh! what crosses damp our joys!

Sweets there are none without alloys.

My eagerness o'erstep the table,

And made the house a very Babel.

The noise my mistress forward drew:

"Oh! Mr. Sancho, is it you?"

"Ah! Sirrah, I shall make you rue."

I skulk'd away with timid leers,

I hung my tail, and eke my ears:

With panting heart I trembling lay,

And thus I heard my mistress say:

"Fine mischief here before my eyes!

"A China plate there scatter'd lies,

"And here a pitcher broke in two;

"The goods not ours;—what shall we do?"

"—why take the cur, and bang him,

"Or, if 'twill pay the damage, bang him.

"My purse shall ne'er make good the loss."

So off she flounc'd with angry tofs.

Now, madam dear, since mistress thus

About two shillings makes a fuss,

I thought (for night good counsel brings

To wretched curs as well as kings),

I thought I would your pity seek,

To save from woe a dog most meek.

Think, oft my silken ears you've smooth'd,

And oft with smiles my fondness sooth'd;

Think, oft my forehead sleek you've patted,

And strok'd my back with sea-weed matted.

Then oh! in goodness ope your purse,

To keep me from a jail, or worse.

Herein you'll much oblige poor Sancho,

Who has indeed no cash in banko;

So once more begs, with due submission,

You'll grant the sum of his petition.

SANCHO.

The Verses at the Head of each Monthly Page, in this Almanack, are the favor of, a virtuous, Worthy, and well deserving
Friend. M.

JANUARY hath XXXI. Days, 1784.

THE WISH.

I F I, unblam'd, might make a Choice,
And lift to Heav'n a suppliant voice,
To Heaven be this my Prayer :
Oh ! bear me to the silent shade,
Free from the Noise of Vain Parade,
I'd spend my Moments there.

FEBRUARY hath XXIX Days, 1784.

A rising Spot of Ground I'd chuse,
Of tow'ring Elms, or ancient Yews,
With asping Trees between :
A spacious Lake should grace the View,
Where finny Hosts, their Sports pursue,
From Morn to silent E'en.

6 Brig from Glasgow —
10 Adamant St Lawrence
arrived - 10th Ship from London
23 Billy came home

2 Adamant & St Lawrence sailed

31 Charles sailed for Paspamagaddy.

I'd have a House, but not too great,
 Whose Rooms, instructed by the Gate
 That pointed to my Door,
 Shou'd to the Neatly open be,
 For Heav'n, I trust, would find in me,
 A steward for the Poor.

VI. JUNE hath XXX. Days, 1784.

Nor would I from the World retire,
I'd have a cheering social Fire,
As Irish Bards have sung;
Where Friends should sit with harmless Glee,
And tell their Joys and Grievs with me,
With undissembling Tongue.

Midst these, the virtuous First should prove
 The boundless Treasures of my Love;
 They should command my Heart.
 Whatever Fortune did bestow,
 Alike to them should freely flow,
 For love must still impart.

IX. SEPTEMBER hath XXX Days 1784.

The Partner that I'd wish to find,
Should have an open, gen'rous Mind
From Affectation free.
An Heart to feel another's Care,
An Hand that open'd still to share,
What Heaven conferr'd on me.

X. OCTOBER hath XXXI Days, 1784.

With Sensibility possess'd,
Of all the Female Passions best,
Her Mind be richly stor'd.
'Tis this Commands the pitying Tear,
'Tis this the drooping Heart can Cheer,
And unknown joys afford.

XI. NOVEMBER hath XXX Days, 1784.

Her form, if lovely, I should prize,
 If the reverse, I'd not despise;
 Since Heaven the Fabrick fram'd,
 A virtuous Soul my Heart should gain,
 All else, beneath the Sun, is vain
 To keep a Heart enchain'd.

XII. DECEMBER hath XXXI Days, 1784.

To Heaven be this my last Request,
 Oh! Grant a Race to make me blest;
 Whose harmless Mirth should yield
 New joy to ev'ry opening Day:
 Well pleas'd I'd see their guiltless Play,
 A down my Vernal Field.

At Noon with them I'd oft repair,
 In some Retreat to take the Air,
 And fan the sacred Breeze,
 Of Love to God ! And Love to Man :
 Love universal is the Plan,
 That leads to spoleless Fame.

Take three pints of small-beer; half a pound of honey; of red sage, rosemary, bramble leaves, and celandine, of each an handful; of rock-allum, as much as will make it sharp, let it boil till it comes to a quart, then strain it, and keep it for use.
